

To Whom It May Concern:

Throughout my experience as an intern with College Works Painting, I learned more about myself and how to run a business than I ever thought possible. This internship was easily the most difficult experience I have ever taken apart of, but I can honestly say I would not change it for anything.

The internship itself taught me various different techniques on how to run a business and manage multiple people, but I took so much more away from the experience than the tangible skills I developed during it. The confidence that I have developed during this internship not only has translated to my professional life, but to my personal life as well. I feel like I have developed so much as a person and I can thank College Works Painting for that.

Another huge reason that I enjoyed this internship so much was because of the various new people I met throughout this year. I met some of my good friends through this internship and have met several people that will be able to help me later in life, whether it be in business or in my personal life.

If you are second-guessing this internship, I strongly recommend that you challenge yourself and take a leap of faith. I promise you won't regret it.

Ryan Greenberg

University of Minnesota, Carlson School of Management